I've been told that his original last name is Brandeaux (same pronunciation, Americanized spelling).

Hehehe. Actually he fell in love with a Tahitian, namely, the island beauty who was his love interest in that movie. Don't know if he married her, but they had a child, a boy, I believe.

Incidentally, Brando played Fletcher Christian, whose descendent, Tom Christian, VP6TC, still lives on Pitcairn Island to this day.

Dick Tracy, the square jawed comic strip detective, was well known for his 2-way "wrist radio," but aside from eavesdropping gear, real detectives use more conventional radio equipment. The readily available 'Police Call' directory lists most frequencies used by police investigators, and there are published lists of frequencies used by federal investigators, but where can you hear private detectives? ... real-life private eyes portrayed by shows like Barnaby Jones, Columbo, Mannix, Cannon, and Booker?

Here is a sampling of frequencies licensed to private investigators. Although most are located in Illinois, some can be used across the country.

As a member of USAF MARS BST acrtivities I did more of that sort of thing than you might imagine.

Poor excuse! Do you also apply that logic to, say, income tax evasion? Vote fraud? Shoplifting?

The privacy portions of it were intended to forbid disclosure of private (as opposed to BC) information which one happened upon by chance. I do not believe the authors anticipated that a cult of people who search out such information would arise. In that sense ECPA is a correction of an omission. If the authors of the CommAct had anticipated that cult, the CommAct provisions you cite as permission would not likely exist.

The Bill of Rights provision forbidding unlawful search and seizure.

Both are "broadcast" media.

Subject: The "right to receive"

Date: 21 Nov 89 00:24:32 GMT
From: vsi1!daver!lynx!neal@apple.com (Neal Woodall)

If radio waves reach into my home, then I have a right to receive and attempt to demodulate them.

Where did you get this idea from? It's not in the Bible, the Constitution, the Communications Act of 1934, the ECPA, or anyplace else that I know about.
It's a nice idea, it's one that I approve of, but it is NOT one of the recognized rights of society, in the USA or in any other country.

Governments have the unlimited right, which they have exercised in the past and continue to exercise, to determine not only who may transmit via radio and what they may transmit and when they may transmit it and what kind of equipment and antennas they may use, and who may fix them when they break, but also to regulate the reception of radio waves (including who and when and how and with what). The various state scanner and radar-detector laws are examples, as are the ECPA and the Communications Act of 1934 and the zoning regulations of Boulder County.

If you think that the government's rights in this area ought to be restricted, or the individual's rights made clearer, you should exercise your unquestioned right to petition your government for redress of grievances. However, simply declaring that you have a right to receive based on some layman's notion of the laws of trespass does not create that right.

Again, let me say that I agree with the spirit of what you're saying. And I'm not picking on Neal particularly; he's one of many people in this group who have said or thought the same thing. But wishful thinking, even if it has a certain amount of moral force, is not the same as a right, God-given or otherwise.
